Ingrid Neuque

Trained as a professional in Social Work. In 2019. Received the title of Expert in Indigenous Peoples, Human Rights and International Cooperation from Carlos III University of Madrid. She has been affiliated for three years with the National Indigenous Organization of Colombia. Currently, she is linked to the Commission for the Clarification of Truth (CEV) directly in the Macro Territorial Amazonica. At the same time, she provides technical support to the traditional authorities of her community and tutors students of the I FILAC Diplomado "Pueblos Indígenas y la Agenda 2030 en el Contexto de la Pandemia COVID 19

Patricia Gualinga

Patricia Gualinga was born and grew up here in a bamboo hut with a palm leaf roof. As the daughter of Don Sabino, the community's Shaman, her life shifted on the day in 2002 when 600 soldiers and 400 workers arrived unannounced with helicopters, dogs and explosives to do seismic explorations. She then made her decision that was "No". Patricia became a "Saramanta Warmikuna", a messenger in the fight for the Amazon rainforest and an ambassador for nature's rights. She is very determined though she regrets that she is continually on the defensive. In May 2019 she received the environmental activism prize at the International Festival of Environmental Films in the Canary Islands.

Energy & Poverty Village

Moderator: Cynthia Cassullo | Accountant - Masters in Applied Economics, Coordinator of the Department of Economics - Pontifical Catholic University of Argentina (UCA).

For an Energy System that not Divides, but Adds Up. Our economical paradigm is based on infinite growth with a consequent increase in energy needs and in the cost of energy production. Besides, the relationship between economic growth and fossil fuel energy is environmentally degrading and socially unequal. The transformation of this pattern requires a transition to a low-carbon system, but not only. The transition shall not be exclusively clean, but inclusive. Then, rethinking the energy system paradigm brings important challenges: how to transit to a carbon-neutral energy system that is inclusive? how to deal with the social impacts of the transition on the current jobs? what a Social Green Deal looks like?

Agriculture & Justice

Moderator: Caterina Rondoni | Ph.D. student in Environmental Sustainability and Wellbeing, specialist in human rights and environmental rights.

Agriculture and Justice are keywords that, together, answer the great challenges of ecological conversion towards integral Ecology. Agriculture is the basis of all food production, while Justice of every democratic system. These words, if mutually intertwined and in harmony, form the basis of a free and dignified society, where people are at the center. Pope Francis invites us to practice fraternal love as the realization of social justice. With this objective, the Village has the support of several sectors of society from which its villagers represent as social activists, farmers, indigenous people, business owners, and researchers. The objective is to offer real proposals as tools for transforming the current economic model into that in which the person and the planet are at the center.

Women For Economy

Moderator: Olena Komisarenko | PhD student at the Pontifical University of Saint Thomas Aquinas.

The village Women for Economy promotes women's full participation to economic life to transition towards a new and improved economic system. Women have special talents. They have a systemic view that can grasp the interconnections across society and nature, and the ability to look at the various components of people's well-being to ensure sustainability. Care and unpaid work should be recognized as a central economic asset. Reduction of inequalities and the gender-gap are key: we should not only guarantee equal pay, but also equal access to health services, education, legal protection, and policies to conciliate motherhood with working life.

Work & Care

Moderator: Vanessa Hassson | Ph.D. in Nature Rights and MSc in International Relations Law from Pontifícia Universidade de São Paulo (PUC/SP). Specialist in Environmental Law from Faculdade de Saúde Pública (FSP/USP). Founder of the NGO MAPAS.

Care as a work of value: new cultural perspectives of work activity. Every woman and man on the earth is called to take care of creation. People provide necessary care for each other, they care for (and harm) the earth, and they can "take care" through their work. Thus, work needs to be taken care of through an "integral human ecology" perspective, as Pope Francis asks of us. This village aims at exploring both work and care and the possibility that they can develop together, in the context of the profound technological, social and regulatory transformations that we are experiencing. We seek to find ways to work and care that honour our responsibility to love and respect one another and all of creation.
